Color Figure Policy

The electronic (online) version of each paper will be the definitive version, and the print version is not guaranteed to be exactly the same as the online version.

Electronic Version: We will include in the electronic version as many color figures as you wish, with the sole restriction that the use of color be consistent with effective presentation of the science, as judged by the editors. We urge you to be restrained with the use of color; remember, there are sizeable numbers of readers who experience color-blindness.

Print Version: JSR will provide one page of color free in the print version; after this, we will require $500 for each additional page of color printing. If you are unwilling or unable to cover the costs for the additional color in the print version, we will convert the remaining color figures to monochrome.
